Technical Design and Premium Calculations for Crop Index Insurances
How to Calculate Premiums for an Index Insurance Contract
This four-module course is a continuation of the previous series, which provided a general introduction to agricultural index insurance.
The current course covers much more technical aspects and is aimed at an audience who already have a basic knowledge of Excel and are comfortable with the elementary mathematical concepts of insurance and the mathematical concept of functions.
The mathematical level used does not go beyond high school, but the concepts covered are clearly at university level. They need a computer to complete these modules, self-paced course that will allow you to make progress and come back when needed.
We cover the fundamentals of databases and the precautions that need to be taken when processing them. We cover the Excel functions that enable this software to be used as a mini-database, which is ideally suited to rainfall data for a region extending over a few years. So, in this series of modules, we ... 📄 Open Content
